A GOOD ANECDOTE. The following amusing sketch manner in which an irascible President of old ambridge was once mollified by a mug of flip, is from the pen of "Jack Robinson," the Boston correspondent the New York Times :

Apropos to Porter, whose name I have just taken in min : I heard a good college story, the other day, which may as well set down here. Porter is an institution Cambridge. He is a person of varied accomplishments, and keeps 'a house of call.' None like him to brew beshop or mingle a shandy gruff. But his chef Touvre is flip. It is reported among the students that Ganymede, when dying-because its all nonsense about Ganymede being immortal, he left Jupiter's service, married Hebe, set up an inn with his savings, and died at a good old age-it is reported that Ganymede left Porter the recipe for making both nectar and ambrosia, which recipe he surreptitiously copied from Juno's recent book, and Porter, improving on the idea, conceived the happy thought of mingling both divine materials. and producing an ineffable beverage-something which should combine the elements of the supernal meat and the supernal drink -- a harmony of solid and fluid, to which each element should contribute its celestial flavors. He carried out the idea. He mingled the ambrosia and the nectar, and all Olympus turned pale with envy, for the result was flip. With such a class origin, it was not to be wondered at that under graduates, who are notorious for their love of mythological matters, should find themselves attracted Porter's, and there refresh their reminiscences of Olympus with draughts of the divine beverage. In fact, such was their devotion to this branch of classical study, and so inspired did they frequently get-inspired even to the Pythonic pith of being unintelligible in their peech—that the matter attracted the attention of the resident of the College—a venerable gentleman of the period, whose name I have forgotten. Heartless and gnorant persons, entirely misconceiving the spirit in which the under-graduates visited Porter's, reported to his worthy person that the students were in the habit getting drunk every night on flip. It must be seen to. ternest countenance, and sallies out to blow up the clas-[m] Porter, for leading his students astray. First of he enters Porter's. He is greeted with respect.— He interrogates Porter: 'Sir, many of the under gradustes come here, I understand?' 'A few,' modestly redies the landlord. 'They come here frequently, Mr. Porter?' They drop in now and then, sir.' 'And they drink a beverage called Flip, sir?' 'Sometimes, sir.'— They drink a great deal of it, Mr. Porter?' 'Well, they do take considerable. 'They get drunk on it, Mr. Porter?' The discreet Porter remained silent.—

The walls of the room where Henry Lawrence died still remain. Every shot has its story, every angle its hero, or, hapily, its heroine-and its victim. "Neill's Gate" still stands outside the Resideney, into which his lifeless body was brought, and where it lies under a becoming tomb. I wish I could say to the people of England, who lamented Havelock so deeply, that the grave of their chosen one is worthily marked, or that its present condition is worthy of the remains which lie there, or of the country. When I visited the Alumbagh, where Sir Henry Havelock was hurriedly interred, in the march of the relieved garrison out of Lucknow, I saw, in the unclean garden ground of the place, open to N. C. The imports this week are 27,200 bales, and the sa es 63,300, of which 9,000 were taken on speculation, and 10,000 for export. To-day 8,000 bales were sold—the market closing firm.
